1	Great topic	8/5/2025 8:21 AM
2	3 hours was enough for the session. would be helpful to have the powerpoint prior to the session	8/4/2025 1:31 PM
3	It was useful information, but it was a lot of didactic material overall. Some of it seemed a little higher level than was necessary to understand the content. Maybe simplifying or making more interactive for future sessions?	8/4/2025 10:37 AM
4	Not sure if part of this could be broken up with some on Thursday and some on Friday? It was pretty dense for everything at once	8/3/2025 10:08 PM
5	Pat's sessions are always illustrative, and bring up thoughtful points to take back to help our own learners. The joy of teaching is apparent and she is wonderful!	8/2/2025 12:22 AM
6	This was a dense topic, that I haven't considered before, but Pat did a nice job breaking it down into understandable sections and it was neat to try and apply it to something applicable.	8/1/2025 8:18 PM
7	Learned a lot about how this can apply to the way we teach (and remediate) trainees	8/1/2025 4:22 PM

1	Very nice session, great choice for the last session as I think we all left feeling enthusiastic and on a good path forward.	8/4/2025 10:37 AM
2	I feel like my attention was low at this point, but maybe if the cognitive load theory wasn't all in the morning, people may have a bit more attention	8/3/2025 10:08 PM
3	I may reflect and find this more useful later, but the 5/10 yr down the road projects to me feel dependent on many non-work issues (health of family, if I stay @ institution, where kids are, etc). I would have found bringing CV & reviewing it with peer groups, working more with leadership skill acquirement would help. Or, better yet-- have a networking/problem solving situation with folks of similar roles (CDs, PDs, Dept VC/Clinic leads, fac dvlp) so we can problem solve and come up with more group projects in our cohort!! Presenters were great, topic is just nebulous.	8/2/2025 12:22 AM
4	Nice way to wrap up the course with branding and goal setting.	8/1/2025 8:18 PM
5	Thinking about brand was really helpful; liked ending on goal setting	8/1/2025 4:22 PM
